

I believe that:

(1) In a very confined environment, like an aircraft, the misuse of cellular phone for chatting will make an intolerable experience, from which one does not have an option of stepping out.

(2) There seem to be no conceivable reason that someone, including businessmen, can not wait to communicate on ground for a maximum of four hours on a domestic flight. I fail to understand any compelling reason to allow cell phone use onboard.

(3) Just like constantly using cell phone while driving, most users do not seem to have any respect for other people around them who have to tolerate their nuisance.
